

While I think the idea of a national no call list/policy is good I DO NOT want one that is weaker than the Indiana no call list law. Since the Indiana law went into effect it has been a blessing to not be bothered every evening by someone who I DO NOT WANT TO CALL ME. Consequently, unless the FCC rules would be more restrictive than the Indiana state law I would prefer the FCC to stay out of this and leave it to the states to set the law. While one cannot often say that the Indiana legislature has done a good job in this instance the no call list law they have done a very good job and I do not want to see it changed.
